Dance teacher Adrienne Haslet-Davis vowed she would return to star in the ballroom again, despite losing her left foot in the Boston Marathon bombings. Few, however, could have guessed it would be so soon.

The 32-year-old survivor has become an inspirational figure in the aftermath of the April 15 terror attacks, and touched by her story, producers for ABC's "Dancing With the Stars" have sent a camera crew to Boston for a profile to air on the show Tuesday.

"DWTS" pro Derek Hough even told the Boston Herald that he would dance with her after she recuperated and underwent rehab.

"I absolutely want to dance again and I also want to run the marathon next year," Haslet told the Associated Press. "I will crawl across the finish line, literally crawl, if it means I finish it."

There have been so many requests for media interviews

The background is a deep blue, star-filled night sky. A single, very bright star in the upper right quadrant has a prominent four-pointed diffraction pattern. Other stars of various colors and sizes are scattered across the field.
